Case Description

The first young person presented at the age of ten with polyarthritis (ANA negative, rheumatoid factor negative) and bilateral uveitis detected on eye screening. Although her polyarthritis responded well to treatment, the uveitis persisted despite 15mg/m2 subcutaneous methotrexate.

She was started on infliximab and responded well with good control of her arthritis and her improvement in her uveitis but the infusions were discontinued following a severe infusion reaction. She was switched to adalimumab but the uveitis persisted.

Which of the following is correct?
(1 correct answer)

- Uveitis is a licensed indication for infliximab and adalimumab.
- The absence of rheumatoid factor is unusual in JIA.
- Eye screening in JIA is recommended for all children with suspected or confirmed JIA and irrespective of ANA status.
- Methotrexate is less likely to cause side effects when given by subcutaneous route.
